Recent Barrier Tape Events

- An employee went under a red barricade tape as they walked down a hallway
- An employee went under a red barricade tape as they entered their office
- An unknown individual ripped/tore down barrier tape and a barricade information sign posted across a door
- Senior managers are concerned this might be a cultural issue, not a communications issue
- Trust the persons using the tape
- Saying “I did not know” or “I did not see it” are no longer acceptable
- Managers at BNL now expect workers to know barrier rules and obey them

Here, Let Me Hold It While You Do That

- This photo was taken about 4 hours after a long lecture about the importance of people not crossing the danger tape
- Management didn't want anyone to stand under suspended loads
- The employee was using a grinder to cut the wire ties holding the covers over the bottom nozzles
- The danger tape must have been meant for pedestrians
- Never work under a crane load!
